The stock market is not materially changed in the volume of its business, but the transactions seem to be more impartially distributed than usual. Green 8's are selling freely at 90, and our pre-dictions that they will reach 95 are in a fair way of being realized. Just at this moment it is the considering the mad activity which characterised the market for them in the very recent past, when the series of favorable moves in open Congress and secret committee rooms not only stimulated transactions but increased rates. Sales were very slow to-day; none above 70. The duliness, which is probably attributable to the fact that the fate of the guarantee bill is not generally known, will of the guarantee bill is not generally known, will not unhorse old stagers, who argue that the stationary features of the market are indicative of the strength of numerous back-bones. And in the meanest kind of time there is a runor affoat that something is passing through the President's mind which may develop itself in the form of a special message to Congress in favor of the District securities generally. The bonds as looked at to-day do not furnish that variation in value—they are robbed of those kalledocopic changes which have so oft pleased the curious; and instead we have a value, which (though not approciating just now except by that slow process which all bonds below par undergo as they approcan maturity.) will not decline.

This is the opening day for the present week in Wall street, and our dispatches harmonize in the report of a strong market for speculative shares.
